An interleukin-1 receptor antagonist, T-1824, suppresses tumor cell invasiveness through the blockage of signal transduction mechanisms. T-1824, a recombinant human interleukin-1 receptor antagonist, is shown to inhibit proliferation, viability, invasion and anchorage-independent growth of cancer cells in vitro. The mechanism of the suppressive effect of T-1824 on tumor cell invasiveness is investigated. T-1824 reduced the phosphorylation of the non-receptor tyrosine kinase p60c-src in the cytosol and increased the phosphorylation of the extracellular signal-regulated kinase (ERK) in the mitogen-activated protein kinase (MAPK) pathway. These results suggest that T-1824 may suppress the invasiveness of tumor cells by inhibiting the MAPK pathway. In today's episode, I talk with Drew Jones, co-founder of FurnitureQ.com about how he came up with his company's name and the recent acquisition of the company by the largest e-commerce retailer in the world, Wayfair. We also chat about his background as a furniture designer, real estate investor, CEO of a furniture manufacturing company, and the ever-changing consumer furniture market. Drew's story is one of the most interesting I've heard in quite some time. After working for a manufacturing firm, Drew was introduced to the online e-commerce world, where he started out in the "buying and selling" category, but quickly realized the potential in the "selling" side. In an effort to continue to find new markets and ways to grow, he started to "research" what new furniture was becoming increasingly popular. And that's when he came up with the idea of providing a service where people could get an educated opinion on what kind of furniture would be best for their homes. After three years in that market, Drew had enough data to convince his business partners to partner up with him to launch the company that is now FurnitureQ.
