She said she had not seen the movie yet, but she was interested in the dubbing and she was. When can we expect a dubbing version of the new Twilight movie? Astrocytic pH regulation and (14)C-L-leucine metabolism in brain homogenates. The metabolic fate of the tracer (14)C-L-leucine in homogenates of bovine brain is examined in the presence or absence of an active glycolytic process. Activities of the enzymes pyruvate kinase, lactate dehydrogenase, and glutamate dehydrogenase were increased by incubation with 20 mM glutamate. These activities are thought to reflect glycolytic activity, and Lleucine labeling was used as an index of glycolytic activity. Activity of these enzymes appeared to change linearly with incubation time, and L-leucine labeling of products and precursors of the amino acids alanine, aspartate, and glutamate were linear in time over a 1-hr incubation period. The maximum labeling of these amino acids was obtained with a homogenate that had been incubated for 20 min with 20 mM L-leucine. The labeling of these amino acids in a glutamate-activated homogenate was higher than in control homogenates, but the labeling of most amino acids showed no apparent difference between glutamate-activated and control homogenates. These results suggest that the glycolytic machinery is active at rest and is active at
